Jane Kelsey : No Ordinary Deal before purchasing it in order to gauge whether or not it would be worth my time, and all praised No Ordinary Deal:

2 of 3 people found the following review helpful. If you're fighting TPP, you'll love this!By James MaysThis group of essays by Australian New Zealand authors provided a very useful background to their situation and outlook on what is arguably the most significant multi-lateral trade agreement proposed by the U.S. since the WTO, and despite the 2010 date, should be part of the toolkit of any activist fighting this monstrous agreement.1 of 3 people found the following review helpful. Very articulate and not a casual readBy RADONNA S MARSHALLIf you are serious about the TPPA this is for you. I doubt I have the capacity to go cover to cover but read the excerpts. I use this a reference book since there is such a mystic about the entire treaty.A lot more is involved in this that is the New World Order. I did not realize how much they had developed at this point. Turning this concept around will be very difficult. Not turning it around will be a disaster to our USA republic. The USA seems to be the turnkey so we must persist in exposing this corruption.

This valuable volume of essays shines the light on the secretive process of free trade negotiations and demonstrates the urgent need for greater public and parliamentary scrutiny.' - Senator Bob Brown, Australian Greens
The USA is driving a Pacific trading agreement that deserves much more critical attention than the authorities want us to give it. This book shows why the agreement matters and why it should be resisted.' - Professor Frank Stilwell, Department of Political Economy, University of Sydney
The Trans-Pacific Partnership is no ordinary free trade deal. It has been billed as an agreement fit for the 21st century, but no-one is sure what that means. The US sells this eight-country deal as the key to jobs and economic recovery, while protecting home markets. Australia hails it as a foundation stone for an APEC-wide free trade agreement. New Zealand sees it as a magic bullet to open the US dairy market. None of these arguments stack up. Experts from Australia, New Zealand, the US and Chile examine the geopolitics and security context of the negotiations and set out the costs of making concessions to the US simply to achieve a deal. They argue its obligations will intrude into core areas of domestic government policy which have nothing to do with imports and exports, including foreign investment, financial regulation, access to affordable medicines, food standards, services and government procurement. These are the issues that caused the majority of the public opposition to the US-Australia Free Trade Agreement in 2004. Above all, No Ordinary Deal exposes the contradictions of locking our countries even deeper into a neoliberal model of global free markets - when even political leaders admit that this has failed.
