Coker Every so often you find a book that simply uncovers the truth and presents a better way forward. Participatory Healthcare by Jan Oldenburg is one of those books. No amount of legislation will help us reduce the cost of healthcare if we don't simultaneously improve the state of our population's health. That means including each person in their health decisions, not once a year, or even once a month, but every single day of their lives. She challenges us to rethink how we deliver healthcare by adapting our strategies and technologies to people, rather than forcing them to adapt to us. Ms. Oldenburg uses real life stories to clearly and compassionately communicate the critical importance of recapturing the human factor in the delivery of care - whether in a hospital, clinic, at home, or on a phone or computer. Every person involved in healthcare delivery from doctors, to nurses, to business strategists and health IT professionals will benefit from her rich health industry experience and insights. A must read!

As my cousin was the editor and my sister was one of the subjects, I found this book to be the beginning of better healthcare for all of us. We can now question the diagnosis, and finally retrieve our health care records in real time and finally participate in our own healthcare. The more we know the better the outcome, because WE are finally in charge of our own healthcare.

This book is written through the lens of patients, caregivers, healthcare representatives and families, highlighting new models of interaction between providers and patients and what people would like in their healthcare experience. It will envision a new kind of healthcare system that recommends on how/why providers must connect to patients and families using HIT, as well as suggestions about new kinds of HIT capabilities and how they would redesign systems of care if they could. The book will emphasize best practices, and case studies, drawing conclusions about new models of care from the stories and input of patients and their families reinforced with clinical research.

"In 2030, we'll look back at this book as the first to document the most compelling change ever to occur in healthcare. Participatory Healthcare combines the facts, figures, trends and market forces driving person-centered health with the heart and soul of the patients who are leading this movement. We've made it required reading for all at WEGO Health, and it's a must for every stakeholder in healthcare." -Jack Barrette, CEO, WEGO Health

"Participatory Healthcare, edited by Jan Oldenburg with Associate Editor Mary Griskewicz, could become the defining textbook of our field - the new cornerstone of our movement. This book is a fitting continuation of Tom Ferguson's legacy: by reframing the discussion around the role of patients in healthcare, it makes the case for a world-changing paradigm shift in our approach to patient care. Participatory Healthcare provides exactly what we need: conceptual essays and pragmatic stories that demand to be heard. I very much hope you'll read it, from cover to cover." -Dave deBronkart, Cancer survivor, co-founder and chair emeritus, Society for Participatory Medicine
